The developing countries on the other hand are only just beginning to make progress towards a healthy society. They face many extra problems that make the task even harder. Economic difficulties mean that little money is available for improved medical services. Rapid population growth makes it difficult to provide good quality housing and hygienic living conditions. Production of food is less certain because of the unrealistic climatic conditions. The result of this is inability to provide a balanced diet. The high temperature encourage disease. Finally, long distance and poor communication in many regions lead to sever difficulties in supplying medical help or spreading health education.
